Footy star's helping hand

It's not easy getting a job these days and if you leave school early and without any qualifications, almost impossible. That's why Carlton Football star Mil Hanna went back to his old school, Brunswick Secondary College, recently with a message of advice and hope at the launch of the new project, Work it Out.

A partnership between the College and the Brotherhood, Work it Out will test how early school leavers can help themselves from joining the unemployment queue. The program gets to the heart of the problem for early school leavers — before it is too late.

For students who leave school before finishing Year 11 there is often no clear pathway to post-school education or employment. A range of practical support will give those deciding to leave school opportunities for further education and training.

Brotherhood Executive Director Bishop Michael Challen said at the launch that the project would give students 'much-needed support and a sense of direction so that they will believe that they too can have a future to look forward to'.

The project worker based at the College will also spend time at the Brotherhood's Employment Action Centre, which is managing the new venture.

Proceeds from our Spring Wine Offer (see inside) will go directly to this project.
